FdSc
Agriculture and Environment
(Part-time)

UNIVERSITY OF LINCOLN

The global food supply chain requires productivity and sustainability. This foundation degree has been designed to ensure that graduates are equipped to tackle this challenge and take up key roles in the land-based and environmental sectors.

Developed through close consultation with representatives of the land-based industries, this course reflects the requirements of employers for graduates with relevant knowledge, management ability and well-developed skills.

Course Outline

Your first year introduces you to the principles of environmental agriculture, including the science of crop and animal production. You learn about the financial side of the farming industry, with an introduction to the impact of market forces and government policy upon agriculture. In your second year, you complete an extended work-based project and undertake advanced practical skills such as crop production, resource management and environmental sustainability.

Career Opportunities

This Foundation Degree prepares you for roles in agriculture and associated industries, including farm management, procurement manager, agronomist, technical advisor or consultant.

For more information, contact: Helen Lonsdale, Riseholme Hall, Riseholme
Park Lincoln LN2 2LG, hlonsdale@lincoln.ac.uk, www.lincoln.ac.uk

Courses are still available for any over 19's not in current education/training. New Free level 2 Work-based diplomas and certificates for all 19+ employees, plus free forklift , ATV and Vet medicine training.
